Really I don't think there is much of a difference. Serrated are supposed to be better for cutting hair and slick materials, where the non serrated blades the material can slip. I just picked up a pair of Allen arrow points that were 50% off and they are micro serrated and have a notch at the bottom of the blades for cutting wire and stuff like that. They work well all around and only cost like $4.75. They work pretty well for the small stuff also. I don't have any fancy high dollar non serrated scissors to compare them to but they do compare to $15 Dr. Slicks.
