Me personally. I think two years ago was an anomaly. I also think the fall run is getting shorter and shorter in recent years, and more compressed each year. Enforcement of the EEZ catch is lacking, which is unfortunate since I believe more fish are migrating off the coast in deeper water - and these are the big breeder fish. Sorry for the neg thoughts, but that is how I currently feel about the striped bass fishery.

Besides when was the last time there was rafts of peanuts along the beaches. I need to go back 5+ years to see that.

I really hope we are not doomed to repeat the past. If it does, even to a lesser extent, it would be an illustration of a complete fishery management failure.
