Got out Saturday with Volksnurse to a Pocono stream for some fall brookie fishing. First pool we saw what looked like a redd but no fish on it. Saw several other spots that might have been redds again no fish on them. Started to see more spots but not in what you would think would be good redd spots so I started to discount them as just "current" cleaned spots. We got a few fish but certainly not what this stream is capable of. Then I got a PM from another guy who told me he was also in the Poconos and not only saw redds but paired up fish on them.

Seems a little early yet but with low water and cold nights, I guess it could be time.

Anyone esle seeing spawning? I guess the browns can't be far behind.
