

---

Subject: : Paflyfish General Forum

Topic: : 30" Browns

Re: 30" Browns

Author: : SBecker

Date: : 2013/11/5 10:16:18

URL:

Quote:

ryguyfi wrote:

Quote:

SBecker wrote:

Well I hope you kept that one to eat. It was not surviving if you released it

But I really don't think all of these fish die that are handled poorly. You can get punched in the eye, stuck with a needle or even a worse injury and not die, so why should these fish die from mishandling for a minute or so? I agree that they should be handled with care, but the whole "That fish is belly up now" is sometimes overblown IMO.

Ryan,

I agree with you to a point. However, as Squatchy states: Let me literally put my hand down your throat and grab your lungs. Hold you by your lungs for a minute or so, and I guarantee there is some major damage done. This and we are hardier than fish. To compare what you see in that photo's to a punch in the eye and a LO FREAKIN L needle is ridiculous and I feel you need to retract that comment. Additionally, we have medical care and doctors. Let me know when you run into a nurse shark on a freestoner.

BTW, I do not fault the guy. He probably does not know better, and I really did not try to be mean in my answer. Just wanted to let him know that fish is dead.