

Subject: : Paflyfish General Forum

Topic: : Winter fishing

Winter fishing

Author: : trike23

Date: : 2013/11/6 19:13:25

URL:

In the past I have always hung up the fly rods after my last steelhead trip to indulge in my other passion, Waterfowl hunting. But with the Explosion of interest in Hunting, waterfowl hunting in particular I am thinking of doing a little more fishing instead. A little rant on the hunting situation also. It is sad that people think antlers and duck bands are more important than filling your freezer with food for the winter. How hunting became "POP" culture is beyond me and things I see people do make me never wanna hunt again.

Now that I have that off my chest I wanna ask how do you guys like to fish in the winter months? I have to imagine hatches are pretty uncommon? Other than a possible bwo or stonefly hatch? So do most just indy rig nymphs and swing streamers? Are can you still get a few risers in the cold. I guess an even bigger question is it even worth freezing my rear off? It doesnt really matter anyways. I Am mostly looking for a little peace and quite And have to think winter fishing can offer me that. But catching a few fish is always a plus.