I love winter fishing. Not only will you have the stream to yourself most of the time, you can also narrow down your fly selection to a few choices that you can have pretty good confidence in. Besides midges and bwos, I like generic nymph patterns (bhpt, hares ear, etc). Plus you get the chance to fish in the snow, which is a cool experience. Nothing like the sound of rising trout and falling snow as the only sounds you hear on a January day. If you can hit any of the limestoners during the cold months, you'll generally find more active fish.
