I would have to agree with laszlo on this one. While fall fish can be fun, they are really disappointing when fishing for trout. Case in point: I was fishing the Little Juniata during the sulphur hatch this spring and spotted a steady riser on the far bank. I was fishing the long slow pool right at the gorge parking lot (the fish in the lower end of this pool never come easy to me). After airing out a nice, long cast and getting a good drift, the fish eats. I was thoroughly disappointed when what was one of nicest dry fly presentations of my fly fishing career resulted in not a nice brown but the lowly fall fish instead.

None the less they can be an entertaining warm water target. Nice video and thanks for sharing.
