For the chub/fallfish haters - think of the babies as serving as potential food for the trouts. Enough of them might push a 29" brown over the hump to 30"... I share the feeling of disappointment at times, when I hook into a nice fish on a small stream, I catch enough of a glimpse of it to think it is a trout, and then I end up with a horny nosed chub staring back at me. And other times, they don't bother me so much. It's really only when my expectation is that what I hooked is a trout and it isn't that I'm disappointed. I'm sure if I targeted them, it would be a fun pursuit. But I've never managed to diversify beyond trout.
