I agree with pennkev. over the years I have developed a way of telling how big my fish are. anything over 10 usually get an inch to an inch and a half added. if I caught a 20 inch fish it would probably be 25. haha. I don't think that I am the only one. one fish species that i can tell the length of is a striper. they just have a look once they hit 28 inches. the tape is the only way to tell but who really carries a tape around when trout fishing?
