My experience is that rods can be replaced but friends are harder to replace. Don't let an inanimate object ruin a friendship.

Make sure there is no additional visible damage in the tip section, figure out the diameter of the tip, as it is probably different than what the original tip-top was, get a new tip-top and epoxy it on. Or, if it has a warranty, use it. The decent thing would be for your buddy to take care of it for you, so you may need to communicate that to him. I'm sure he isn't feeling great about breaking it.
