It is a good thread,

To lend the rod to a friend is a “touchy” subject and friendships can be at risks here.

I broke this year two or three rods by myself and I sympathize with your lost.

One rod at the first day on Salmon River –9 wt Orvis, than few days ago on steelhead fishing trip - the nice 6 wt Sage rod. They just mysteriously “snap” – no clue why.

From my point of view: if your friend broke a rod (you can lend your rod only to the best friend...right?) he should replace the rod with EXACTLY the same rod or the better one without any delay or problems.

The little concerned angler and gentleman would replace it with a smile and extra little something (like fishing flask full of old brandy... 🍷 ) for your mental disturb and discomfort.

Feelings play the role here and it is a companion over the material object. Follow your heart and senses. There are too many rods and not many good friendships.
