

Subject: : Paflyfish General Forum

Topic: : The Coloration of Wild Browns in Autumn - Some Thoughts and Observations

Re: The Coloration of Wild Browns in Autumn - Some Thoughts and Observations

Author: : troutbert

Date: : 2013/11/11 15:04:41

URL:

Quote:

Fishidiot wrote:

I think he's simply referring to the fact that the fish is on a stringer rather than being released (which is a separate topic altogether) and posted these photos simply to depict colors.

That makes sense. Thanks. I wasn't even close.

One thing that hasn't been mentioned is that if you had 10 different photographers with different gear and they all photographed the same brown trout, and posted their photos side by side, the apparent colors of the trout would vary a LOT.

This was true even in the film days, because different types of film had very different color looks. And film was designed have colors that were "appealing", not "accurate."

And the same situation is certainly still true in the digital era.

I imagine painters are basing their colors on photographic records of the trout, as well as memory, so it's something keep in mind.