My experience with Trout on redds is that they'll still bolt if you get too close to them. They may let you get a little closer than they would otherwise, but they still spook and take off. If that was an active redd, I think there is little chance the fish working it could be caught. Not an excuse for standing in it by any stretch as damage is still being done, and I think Fox did the right thing by trying to explain things, but I doubt the angler was actually fishing for the owners of that redd. Looks more to me like he was digging in his pack for something with the line just hanging.
