fox - those redds in your photo had big brownies (not the monsters from the big river I have seen) - maybe 18", as of a few days ago. They scattered for deep water when I came up and I think they stayed there till things settled down. I don't know how much they hang around the redds. Bass and gills hang to fend off egg eating pests. This time of the year I would guess only crayfish might have to be fended off, and maybe the trouts can babysit - that is, eggsit - from a distance? Trouts aren't like nesting hens - they don't need to sit on the redd to provide body heat.
