There was an interesting article in the Fall Edition of the Trout Unlimited magazine discussing the best ways to fish with your spouse. I for one would never want to start fishing with my wife as IMHO there are things I want to do alone. She is a "quilter" and has never expressed a desire to fish with me. She has conveyed to me many fond memories of fishing with her Dad in the Pine Barrens when she was young so I know she is not adverse to the sport. That having been said we golf together several times a year and we love doing this together especially when we are a twosome and have the course to ourselves. Is this a contradiction? Fish no Golf OK? It is just something about the solitude I get when I fish. Very little talking to anyone, listening to the rhythm of the stream and the wonderful music made by the songbirds along stream banks. This is "my time". My "down" time. Thoughts?
