Yes I'm saying use the fly stop, that's where I send anyone whose starting with a list of his flies to get. As far as the flystop I've really never experienced a consistent wear and tear on the flies.

Fishing fly box was very rude with his emails as well in regards to any of his complaints.

Where as the owner of the fly stop was kind enough to send me materials list in an email on a couple flies that I really do well on and helped me get a solid base to start tying.
