mikesl,

I'm being labeled an elitist? Those fish aren't mine and I was there for only one of them at the time of capture. I'd say it doesn't matter to me if it's stocked or wild. 90% of the places I fish are wild fisheries.

If you are looking for smart stockies that will test you, hit the Tully in late June and watch the fish inspect your fly.....cast after cast.

I'm not saying wild is better than stocked. I get out on a limited basis so I might have a different perspective than some of you. If I've been on here since 07, attended some functions, met a fair number of members and I can't think that 10-15 have even seen me holding a fly rod. That's how little I fish and I don't eat anything that swims. I just do this stuff for fun.

If you are still "green", enjoy the sport and learn as much as you can every time out. It's a great hobby.
