I guess my point is that I'm sure that rubber waders carry less chance of transferring disease than fabric or neoprene, but I'm not going to support going back to those without some good reason to believe that it will make a real difference. If drying felt eliminates the risk and evidence is that 99% of anglers boots completely dry between trips, etc. why should my choice of soles be restricted because of a handful of anglers who fish in one infected creek on Monday, and an uninfected creek on Tuesday and won't take 15 minutes to sterilize their felt soles?
