

Subject: : Paflyfish General Forum

Topic: : Night Fishing During the Colder Months?

Re: Night Fishing During the Colder Months?

Author: : sarce

Date: : 2013/12/2 22:26:05

URL:

I got one at night in March this year when the air temp was 35. Took a woolly bugger. That is the only non-green drake brown I've caught at night so far, I'm new to the game and didn't get to try it much this summer.

I'm not sure it would work great on the limestoners right now with some fish still being in full spawning mode (either paired up or keyed on eggs). Personally I would wait a week or two until more fish are on that post-spawn feeding binge. I did catch a 15-16" brown on a midge this afternoon after watching it gorging on the naturals for a few minutes. There were many more risers than two weeks ago which tells me the spawn has wound down enough that at least some fish are done keying on eggs and back to normal eating habits. This was on a Spring Creek trib.