

Subject: : Paflyfish General Forum

Topic: : Winter fly selections

Winter fly selections

Author: : Big-Bass

Date: : 2013/12/11 9:55:39

URL:

I plan on fishing all winter locally, even if most of the time I get skunked, I still want to make it a point to try. What flies do you suggest would work to produce the best results? Let me start by saying that I am a terrible nymph fisherman. I feel like when I am watching it drift (and I do use an indicator), that is like watching a bobber float when I was 3 and fishing with my dad. It deters me because it seems like I don't know what a strike should look like aside from the slight movement of the indicator. But for low water, I feel that an indicator will spook fish and hurt chances even further. Midges seem even more difficult to fish because they are so tiny and seem like I would have to really weight them to get them into a feeding zone. I am good with streamers and dries, but does anyone have any help for winter nymphing and midge fishing. Or should I just stick with streamers and call it winter? Thanks for any and all help.