I don't like to nymph either, but in the winter I can't deny the effectiveness of it. Try weighted wooly buggers if you don't want to nymph.

I use indie rigs in the winter when I nymph. I usually go with a weighted stone fly, and drop a zebra midge or something off it.

On the spring creeks though, there are BWO hatches going on as early as January (at least the ones I fish), which can be fun!
