B71 is right. You can catch trout all winter. Just about any of your favorite nymphs should work. Use smaller nymphs when the water is lower. I have found that fishing is respectable down to water temps of 35 degrees, when the fish seem to shut down, at least for me. I don't like cold weather, so I generally fish afternoons when the temp exceeds 35 degrees. If you don't like to use regular indicators, you could drop a nymph a couple feet off a dry fly to help detect strikes, too.
