IMO the further north you go the more tight lipped they get. you go to the bait and tackle shops up there and they kinda give you the cold shoulder. this is what has happened in my experiences. now I did go out with one of the best guides of my life up there to. was in Martha's and my guide herb basically taught me everything about the salt. when we were done he gave me like 30 flies that would be good to use the rest of my visit up there. he even offered to take me out the next time I get up there for free.

I would also consider hiring a surf guide. its much easier to learn from someone in person who is there saying cast here because there is some sort of difference in the beach structure and it should hold fish.
