Marketing at its finest. I can see it now....{"WoW....they make a 5wt fly line for CARP! WoW....I have a 5wt! WoW...I'm gonna go buy some Rio Carp line and go carp fishing. NOT!}"} I would have to say that there are certain 5wt (i.e ..REALLY fast rods) that would be able to handle smaller carp and the occasion mid size fish. The real question shouldn't be "Can it handle fish" it should be can it throw the "RIGHT" flies effectively cast after cast. If it can't get the fly on target when it counts then what's the point cuz all your gonna do is spook the fish with errant casts and get frustrated.
