One reason I don't join groups that advocate for the environment is the great many knee jerk reactions to hyper inflated Eco threats. Banning felt soles is nothing more then making people feel like they did something. No it's not better then nothing. It's worse then nothing because what it does is make people sit on their hands and say "well at least we did something."

I also believe that conservation has to be in balance with quality of life. In other words if your not living in a cave, making clothing from animal skins, fishing with a pointed stick, and walking barefoot to work then I don't want to hear about how the sky is falling because of gasoline, air conditioning, and all the creature comforts (like say graphite rods, cast aluminum reels, some kind of plastic fly line, etc) that we all enjoy.
