Hey, look at that.....common sense.

For those that believe in global warming and felt soles being the reason for blah-blah, why isn't your displeasure directed at the manufacturer? Maybe someone can craft a suit aagainst Simms, Chota, Patagonia, William Joseph and others for the spread of rock snot. I'd have to think that pressure from the consumer as well as data returned from studies has given the boot companies the green light to put the felts back in production. The only thing that upsets me is that it's nearly impossible to find felts with studs built into the soles anymore.

Do grass carp stick to felts? If so, guilty!
