USGS gauges as LetortAngler noted, for water levels.

Combine that with [http://www.nohrsc.noaa.gov/nsa/index. ... =e&region=Allegheny Front](http://www.nohrsc.noaa.gov/nsa/index. ... =e&region=Allegheny_Front)

That will get you an estimate of the snow depth. Based on predicted forecast temps and precipitation amounts, I'd predict that what snow is left will melt. Someone who is more regular fishing Spring will have to comment on how winter melt and runoff affects it.
