I'm not sure as I haven't been up in that area since the deep freeze this winter. I do fish the lower J in winter and I find that the main stem is usually open even when the tribs are frozen solid. That said, things are different this year. Personally, my view is that if there's chunk or slush ice in the main river channel.....it's not worth fishing and one should just wait till warmer temps.

If it were me, I'd wait till later this winter if you're serious about actually fishing and not just finding access areas etc.
