Sometimes the light goes off- wow, that makes sense. Better yet you catch some fish.

Fly fishing for me is and was never easy. I have had dozens of frustrating days but it was time well spent outside and on the water. Still consider myself near the bottom of the fly fishing totem pole but it is fun learning and catching some fish.

Many times my more experienced mentors or friends forget what it is like to be just starting out.

Here is something I wish my more experienced friends would have recommended to me:

Wish I fished for warm water fish more starting out. They are easier to catch, require less precise casts and presentations. Plus you can actually catch some fish. When originally started out in 1995, I lost interest and didn't really start to pick it up again until a few years ago.

I could mention many other ideas but wanted to see what others have to say on the subject.
