

Subject: : Fly Tying

Topic: : Dry fly wings

Re: Dry fly wings

Author: : jeremymcon

Date: : 2014/3/3 11:03:28

URL:

Yea I don't really know a "thorax" style dry fly from a Catskill-style dry fly at this point. I read about them in a book I have, but didn't really understand the difference since at the time I wasn't tying hackled dries. I'll have to look over that book again.

Also it looks like my tails are a little too short compared to the one you posted, GenCon. I wonder if these flies will land correctly when I try to cast them? Guess I'll find out eventually.

I wasn't aware of mallard as a substitute for wood duck. I'll have to look around for it. People also tie wings with other materials, right? Like hackle tips, hen feathers, and such?