

Subject: : Fly Tying

Topic: : Dry fly wings

Re: Dry fly wings

Author: : jeremymcon

Date: : 2014/3/3 11:17:47

URL:

Quote:

WildTigerTrout wrote:

I have a friend who is a duck hunter who gave me a bunch of wood duck lemon side feathers several years ago. They do make a nice wing. I tie most of my wings with parapost though. It's waterproof and tough!

Yea I also wondered if I could just tie a para post, but then wrap the hackle normally instead of making a parachute dry fly. It would float a little higher than a parachute, and still have something to represent the wings. Though in that case I may want to split the post like the calf tail wings on a royal wulff.... I could even use grey or tan poly yarn to give the wing a more natural color than the bright white of a royal wulff.