We've just gone through one of the worst winters that I can remember in quite a while. And I haven't fished for over 4 months. But when I do finally string a rod again - and I plan on doing so shortly - it will be very sweet for sure. And I plan on making up for lost time

That said, we've also had many relatively mild winters lately too. The winter of 2011/2012 was very easy going, and there were opportunities to fish just about that whole year.

As for driving times to fish - the best streams are about 2 - 3 hours away from the burgh. I usually just plan on hitting those places during my 2 days off from work, and staying over a night or two. And I've gotten quite used to making those kind of trips for quality fishing.

And there are some pretty good fishing opportunities closer. There is even a small stream that holds a pretty decent wild trout population 40 minutes from my door.

So yeah - even though I wish it was closer to some limestone streams, pittsburgh is still a nice place to live IMO.
