It's great that someone is giving Dick Vincent some credit. He's a hero, IMHO. He not only had a big influence in Montana, but across the US, and the world.

And it's true that the PFBC began moving this direction since 1982, with the beginning of Operation Future. The main citizen group that has supported their initiative has been Trout Unlimited. Trout Unlimited has many, many times sent letters of support for managing streams for wild trout. Has any other group done so?

There are of course other groups on the opposite side of the issue, i.e. sportsmens clubs, urging that they continue stocking over good wild trout streams.

That's just the way democracy works. You have two different groups on either side of an issue. Both advocate for what they want.

If you don't advocate for what you think is best, your wishes will not be considered when the decisions are made.
