
Subject: : Tips and Tricks

Topic: : Fishing Etiquette for Erie.

Re: Fishing Etiquette for Erie.

Author: : jaybo41

Date: : 2008/10/28 10:58:32

URL:

After chasing Steel in Erie for 10+ years, what I've learned is that there are lots of things that SHOULD happen, but don't. Lots of anglers don't even have a concept of stream ettiquite that fish the Erie Tribs. Short list: guys taking other guys spots, fishing over top of others lines, picking up trash, etc. Stream testosterone is another thing I despise about it. Like most of you, I work hard through the week and want to relax when I'm on the water, and I just can't seem to find much of that in Erie anymore...kind of like solitude. Now I have had some great experiences there and met some awesome people. One of the best days I had was when I hooked up with a PSU student who was also frustrated by crowds. We hiked several miles upstream and I learned lots about fly fishing for steelies that day from him. That was a great day on the water.

Give me open water on a trout stream and I'm happy these days. All of these amount to why 1-2 trips a year for me are all I can handle at most. To each their own I suppose.