Thanks - no doubt, he's a gorgeous fish (actually, probably a "she").

Not only is he very large but, in my experience, river SMBs often look their best this time of year. Perhaps this is simply due to having a restful winter in cold temps. After the spawn and during the subsequent summer, SMBs can look pretty rough with split fins, busted dorsal spines, sores and injuries, and battered skin. This particular fish has almost flawless color and skin with near perfect, very large fins. Of particular note: there is a distinct green tone over the upper front of the fish's head, in the dorsal fins, and at the base of the tail. Pretty contrast with the overall brown, gray and gold tones.
