

Subject: : Paflyfish General Forum

Topic: : monster trout.

Re: monster trout.

Author: : Fishidiot

Date: : 2014/4/13 9:15:47

URL:

Quote:

captbugger wrote:
when it comes to monsters fish what is the ticket fly?

There is no "ticket fly." You're trying too hard to find specific, magic answers.

Pay your dues and remember: it's a puzzle - enjoy putting the pieces together. 😊

See my post above: use streamers. Big ones with lots of movement. It is more important however to fish under low light conditions and in the best habitat (those lower river sections during colder months). Don't overlook lesser known waters as well. There are big trout in some places that aren't well known such as the streams you refer to above. Some big streams/small rivers that are better known for bass fishing in summer can be a good place to explore during the colder months. There's often what I call the transition zone in these rivers where you get bass in summer but after October there are some very large trout that start to show up. The upper Potomac River in Maryland is a good example. There are some other examples closer to you....but I'll let you explore and find them.