That advice is crucial. I've been reading a lot of recommended books on fly-fishing while the season kicks off slowly here in SW PA, and one of the most overlooked aspects is the stream's temperature. I believe my success this past Friday in Gettysburg was due to the temps being almost perfect for such an early day in the season. When I dipped my thermometer into the water, it read about 52 degrees, a little on the cooler side, but combined with the overcast sky it made for a pretty good combination for this first-timer. :) They wouldn't take the dries I presented even though I thought I had a pretty good match for what they were smacking on the surface right above me, but the nymph got 'em. :)
