My FF mentor was youtube and this website. I have only been FF for a little over 4 years and at first I also felt like every fish I caught was on blind luck, but the more I fished the more I realized what worked and what didn't and that when I did things right I would catch fish. I would say first off fish as much as you can, and fish as many places as you can. Going to the same familiar holes on the same streams over and over limits what you will learn(I am very guilty of this). Get a friend to start FF with you. When I started my best friend also started and we have been learning together ever since. We both do our own research and often fish by ourselves, but when we go out together we show each other whats been working for us, and often spend hours and a lot of beverages talking about new FF techniques, gear, rigs you name it. I am still very much a beginner myself, but I felt a lot like you at first so I hope this helps.
