What does your setup look like? I had an awful time learning to cast the first fly combo I bought. Turned out the fly line it came with was garbage - it was level instead of tapered, too light for the rod, held the coils from being on the reel, and didn't float.

There's definitely a learning curve even with a proper fly line. Keep at it! I really thought casting at a local quarry was helpful - flat water and few trees really made it easier to focus on the casting. Plus with a dry fly on I'd occasionally catch a sunnie when I made a good cast. Hopefully someone from the forum will be able to meet up with you - folks here seem to be pretty good about that sort of thing.
