I never fish SJW. Just doesn't appeal to me. I like tying flies, and the San Juan worm is about as boring as it gets! I've only ever caught chubs on them, but like I said probably haven't given them their fair share of time in the water.

I also have trouble with wooly buggers though I've been getting better and having more success recently. I think its due to tying them myself - the ones I used to buy were never anywhere near heavy enough. I tie almost all of mine with lead eyes or a tungsten bead with wraps of lead under the body. Even so I don't do nearly as well on them as I do nymphs... Not that I do all that well with nymphs to begin with. I mostly tie on wooly buggers in high off color water lately. Also a really heavy wooly bugger is better to cast in the wind than a nymph rig.
