@mjones32...I fish the Shenandoah Valley fairly often. Chaz provided some good advice but the flows in Shenandoah National Park are typically low this time of year. With low flows come higher water temperatures, spooky fish and an abundance of water snakes. As such, I usually avoid the park until fall. Your best bets are the three limestone springs- Mossy, Beaver and Smith Creeks. All three are governed by special regs, have cold water temps and plenty of fish. The Upper South River trophy trout water in Waynesboro is also an excellent choice. The aforementioned four streams are very convenient to where you will be staying. If you want to do the native brookie thing, I'd recommend the Dry River along Rt. 33 North of Rawley Springs. The Dry has plenty of tributaries flowing that infuse cold water to keep the mainstem in good shape. If you have any other questions, feel free to PM me. The Mossy Creek Fly Shop in Harrisonburg, VA would be a good resource for you as well.
