The on my own fly prospect is why i decided to give fly tying a shot. This day in age, I think the Automatic nature of things has taken alot away from life that people dont even realize. I guess I'm kind of an old soul in a few ways. I enjoy older music, working with my hands, and creating. I think more about how things work, then allowing things to just work for me. I cant wait to feel that " I tied that fly!" moment. Thanks for the input and encouragement.

Nice! Tying your own flies is great. It's cheaper (per fly, though you won't save any money because you'll end up buying way more materials than you'll ever use), you can tie exactly the fly you want, and I find it really rewarding. Since I started tying I find it really hard to enjoy fishing spinning gear. Not that I dislike spinning gear in general, but I just don't have that connection to the lures like I do to the flies I tie myself. Catching a fish on a store bought spinner or spoon feels kind of empty to me compared to catching a fish on a hand tied fly.
