

Subject: : Gear Talk

Topic: : Winston BIII LS vs. Sage One

Re: Winston BIII LS vs. Sage One

Author: : Cold

Date: : 2014/7/29 9:25:46

URL:

I think that it's a matter of personal preference at that point, then. It seems like for what you consider acceptable for dries and streamers, there's no overlap even in theoretical terms, and that a rod that is acceptable at one application will be by definition unsuitable for the other.

I tend to prefer faster rods, but the only rod I can really recommend that I'd consider ideal for both applications...that I've personally used...is a Winston LTX. I have the 9' 4wt and I've used it for everything from #22 BWO emergers for picky spring creek browns up to #2 streamers on a short sink tip for creek/river smallmouth. Naturally, it handles the middle of this range better than the extremes, but it's handled everything I've ever asked it to do.