

Subject: : Gear Talk

Topic: : strike indicators

Re: strike indicators

Author: : JustFish

Date: : 2008/12/6 10:11:47

URL:

Quote:

tomgamber wrote:

Other than the wear on the kinked leader, I think there are times when this could be a good thing as the attachment puts the lower portion (underwater) of your leader at an angle. Much like Jonas described doing for indicator nymphing at last years Jam.

OK, so my drawings aren't as neat as Jack's

I saw a similar rig on William Lorens site. You tie the bobber to the end of the leader and then attach your tippet to the indicator thus creating a ninety degree angle. I haven't tried it yet. I have done a similar rig with a dry fly instead of a bobber. Worked really good actually. Caught some wild browns with it:)