Yup I've spent quite a few days fishing that stretch myself, I know exactly where you are. I've done quite a bit of camping(not so much legal lol) on the other side of the stream from the road.

This spot is one of the areas that gets extremely packed randomly on some days though. There are plenty of better areas to fish, this stretch used to be great until the new bridge construction.

From here south quite a ways is dead water but there are few really nice spots further south.

If you go north further into the state park(actually the best bet is to access it from the smaller less used northern parking lot) theres a few really nice spots. It's also in the woods and more fully enclosed with much much better fish habitat.
