Yes, good point about these books being written >10 years ago. Back then most sources of "honey holes" we're word of mouth, TU meetings or at the local tavern after a few brewskies. These days such books are almost obsolete although some are very specific.

I too use the Pa list of streams with natural reproduction as a starting point. There are streams I fish not there but it is fairly complete. The PFBC list covers about 3000+ streams with not many specifics. I think its good source of info w/o being exploitive.
