I as others learned the sport from someone who spent many hours on the stream. He taught me from the ground up, first seeing what is actually living in the stream at that point in time and matching something in the fly box to it. Then learning to read the water, what rocks do, where snags and fish could be. Then its climb in and learn the simple cast, roll, etc. From there it was spending hours walking from spot to spot jumping each other and he watched me, gave tips, instructions, and hints.

After that it was spend every moment I could in a stream on my own, remembering what he told and taught me. Finally there came the day that when I was able to climb into a stream and hold my own fish for fish with the gent who taught me. Now I find myself tying San Juans for him, sharing some flies that always work in certain streams for me, and showing him the results of the hours of stream time he spent teaching me the very best sport a person could enjoy. Share your fly fishing skilles and talents with someone esle, to keep our sport growing.
