Here are a few pirated from The Hollywood Fly Angler( what ever that is)and from the Fly fisherman site. When drowning the type and brand of waders one wears is is largely inconsequential. Using a San Juan worm instead of an egg pattern is not considered "matching the hatch". There is no such thing as the perfect 5 wt. My own: in certain situations,you can "walk on water" felt soles will slip and slide when least expected ;fall fish like prince nymphs just as well as trout do.No one can own enough fly rods and matching reels.Floating fly lines don't, at least when you need them to.
