Wow, I've never have I considered that. If there is one lone blade of grass behind me, like a magnet, my fly and line are drawn towards it, and it gets grabbed up from the air by the grass, or weed, or limb or of any species or type of vegetative matter in its path. My theory is that my fly and line become positively charged by traveling through the air at such a great speed, all else in the forest, including our own garments and flesh is negatively charged. Opposites attract, so getting stuck in the bushes, trees or on our own person is due to this physical law of nature....therefore it's not my fault at all.
