Afish, tall grass is amongst the worst. Yeah, it seems like one frickin blade will suck in any cast within 10 feet. Then you actually tear off the whole blade from the ground, but no, its not done yet. Taking the thing off your fly turns tricky because it just keeps tearing, and you end up with a smaller and smaller green thing on your hook.

Thats a great picture of a tree giving the one finger salute. Does feel like that sometimes, doesn't it?

The weirdest thing I ever hooked was a golden retriever. I had seen him earlier, he came down over the hill and wasn't with anybody. He was friendly so I petted him a few times and asked him where his master was, no collar and a tail wag was his only answer. He wondered back up the hill, I figured the owner was up there, so I went about my business thinking he was gone. On one of my backcasts I heard a yelp. Got him good too, I felt so bad, thank god for barbless hooks. No collar, so I never did find or tell the owner, I hope whoever lost that dog found it and there were no permanent injuries from my fly.
